July 13, 2020 – Stamford, CT: Check-it-Off Travel today announced the completion of their road trip through America’s Mountain States and the Pacific Northwest. The goal of the 17-day trip was to embrace the outdoors and drive some of America’s best scenic byways on the way to small town destinations, while also staying safe and taking the necessary precautions. The company wanted to be able to give first-hand advice to their clients on navigating travel in a post-COVID world.

“This summer’s road trip demonstrated the need for extra planning as well as flexibility in those plans in the current travel environment. Today, with the frequent changes related to travel restrictions, it is even more important to understand the hurdles that must be navigated to have a successful trip,” explained Marie Shirley, co-founder of Check-it-Off Travel. “As we look ahead to future travel, the takeaways from this road trip will be invaluable to our services as we brainstorm and plan trips for our leisure travel clients.”

Details on the locations visited can be found on the Check-it-Off Blog page (link). The Summer 2020 Road Trip is part of a broader initiative of Check-it-Off to always provide quality U.S. travel planning and inspiration from experts who have been to the destinations they promote.
